

Keen's guidance

CONCERNING the George Borg affair, I see in last week's Midweek that George was thought to have committed a foul on one of the Woking players.

As I was very close to the said incident I can assure you that George deliberately stood on the back of the Woking player's leg when he was down on the ground.

I have always appreciated the commitment and endeavour that George puts into his game and that the manager likes these qualities in the player.

To me George would have benefited from Mike Keen's management at a very early age as I know from my own experience that Mike does not tolerate bad behaviour from players, who come under his management from as young as 11 years old.

You ask any young player, who has been fortunate enough to have had Mike Keen's guidance and coaching over the years, and they will all hold him in their highest regard and respect.

For George Borg to state that the manager has 'double standards' is a bit strong and as for George being voted last month's Player of the Month that was more a vote of confidence from the supporters.

If and when George moves to another club I wish him all the best as I have enjoyed seeing him play when he has kept his mouth tightly closed and got on with playing the game as it should be played.
