

Sickened by behaviour

I AM writing in desperation in the hope that this letter will at last awake W y c o m b e Wanderers, chairman, committee and manager to the rapid decline in the good name of our once famous and respected club — both on and off the field.

The recent match against Hendon was a disaster, not only on the playing side but also because of the behaviour, which although showing a deterioration over the past two or three seasons, reached new depths.

Language

This must result in Mr Lee, who prided himself during his period as manager on this import aspect, immediately calling an extraordinary meeting, involving everybody associated with the club.

I have followed 'The Blues' since 1954 when I was a lad of seven and have regularly watched the team both home and away, first with my father, a fanatical supporter, and this season I've started bringing my nine year old daughter.

But after the diabolical behaviour and vile language from George Borg, which noticeably affected several other members of the team plus the referee and linesman, I've decided to stay away until our pride returns.

Mike Keen inadvertently is also contributing to our downfall by making every excuse. It was lack of experience against Chelmsford, lack of confidence against Staines and Bracknell.

There was no comment against Hendon who had to play a forward in goal, who never had one shot to save, while so-called strikers were walking around with their heads down feeling sorry for themselves.

No, Mr Keen, it's not lack of experience.

It's lack of attitudes, discipline, dignity, initiative, ideas, inventiveness and last but not least incentive (most players are not playing for their places).

Next season is our centenary; we could be dead and buried by then!
