WYCOMBE Wanderers will deal with coloured striker Roger Moore and Paul West privately following their sensational set-to last week in a reserve match at Wembley.

Moore was sent off for violent misconduct after pushing and arguing with team mate West during the second string's humiliating 9-2 defeat.

But reserve team manager Tim Anning refuses to make the matter public property, preferring instead to sort it out inside the club.

"The incident is in danger of being blown out of all proportion," said Anning.

Regret

"It will be sorted out privately within the club and at this stage I cannot say what will happen to the players concerned. Both of them regret the incident and it will not happen again because these things cast the club in a bad light."

According to Anning, trouble flared after the Reserves had conceded some "bad goals" shortly after half-time.

"The lads were frustrated because they have been playing well all season," said the manager.

"Moore set off on a run up the flank, avoiding one tackle but refusing to pass inside to team mates before eventually being brought down by a Wembley defender.

"Words were then exchanged between Moore and West with Moore pushing Paul away.

The referee, who had spoken to the coloured striker earlier, called him over after this and dismissed him.

The sending off came after 59 minutes and the 10-man Wycombe side let three more goals in the last half an hour.

Ironically, Blues had got off to a super start with John Gutteridge giving them the lead after 15 minutes and Martin Smith pulling them level at 2-2 after a strong Wembley rally.
