

THEY do say lightning never strikes in the same place twice, but Wycombe Wanderers are facing the same scenario that haunted them two seasons ago on their first chaotic adventure into the GM Vauxhall Conference.

That adventure was short lived. Ill prepared, they suffered the ignominy of relegation. Back in the Conference this season we find them again ill prepared for the higher grade of football and consequently in line to make the drop again at the end of this season.

We mustn't write the Blues off just yet, but you know a team's in trouble when the fans are as concerned to learn how well the other league strugglers fared as the home result. Now with Peter Suddaby throwing in the towel the club is looking more for a saviour than a manager.

Why is the club facing relegation twice in three seasons? Are the problems solely on the field or do they stretch into the board-room? It's a criticism that has been made in the past and vehemently denied.

The die is far from cast with 17 league matches still to play, but if the club is to enjoy the grandiose future planned for it we need action off the field as well as on it.
