

Supporters of a lost cause

CALL them hardy, call them masochists, call them just plain daft.

Christen them what you like but you can't deny that Wycombe Wanderers supporters just have to be some of the best in the GM Conference.

They are languishing near the foot of the table already having got through two managers this season and an assortment of players, yet the faithful fans keep turning up.

According to the latest attendance figures released by the league, the Blues are averaging 1,375 supporters for home matches this season.

Every time they have played at Loakes Park this term, over 1,000 have turned up and their average puts them eight out of 22 in the gate table.

Astonishing when you consider the following facts. They have played 13 home games, lost seven of them, scored 14 times and let in 36.

Wycombe's disciples have had to endure a 4-0 stuffing from Stafford, a 5-1 mauling by Maidstone and a 7-0 battering from Barnet.

It's an old cliché, but Wycombe really do owe it to their supporters to stay up.
