

Celebrity fans

THOUGHT we recognised the distinguished features of the chap propping up the corner of the bar in the boardroom at Wycombe Wanderers.

None other than that super cartoonist David Langdon (Punch, Sunday Mirror, et al) who, we seem to recall, also played the part of Lord Bellamy in that famous TV series, Upstairs, Downstairs.

David lives not far from town and became a firm Blues supporter when he started coming to Loakes Park with his sons rather than subject them to the hurly-burly of supporting his very favourite team, Tottenham Hotspur.

The habit has clearly stuck since David's son, Ben, now grown up, was sitting alongside his dad in the director's box.

If Wanderers continue playing so well, we can imagine other celebrities living hereabouts wanting to join its fan club.