Blues boss set to fight charge of disrepute

MARTIN O'Neill will contest his second FA charge of the season.

The Football Association have confirmed that Slough referee Eddie Green has reported O'Neill, who now faces another charge of bringing the game into disrepute.

Green dismissed the Wycombe boss from the dug-out for alleged use of foul and abusive language at Wycombe's home match against Northwich a fortnight ago.

Now O'Neill is asking for a personal hearing with the FA.

O'Neill was charged under the same FA disciplinary rule, 26 (a10) and fined £200, after he ran into trouble for a confrontation with another referee, Royston Osborne, after Wycombe had lost at Cheltenham in February.

Said O'Neill: "I'm going to fight it, put myself in. There were enough witnesses on the bench to suggest there was no language used at all and that I'm certainly going in with."

O'Neill claimed he attempted a joke when spoken to by Green, adding: "He's never given me a chance, he just ordered me off. He claims I used abusive language. I think he's not right there."

No date for a hearing has yet been set.
