Price increases for season tickets at Adams Park

WANDERERS' fans are being asked to pay for their team's success as season ticket prices at Adams Park top the £100 mark.

It is the juniors and old age pensioners who wish to sit who will have to reach deepest into their pockets.

Most clubs who were able to release their new season ticket prices are operating a discount scheme during this month.

Blues supporters have until June 19 to benefit, and adults wanting to sit need pay £11 (£96) more than they did last season. But juniors and OAPs have to find £84 for their season's seat.

Several Conference clubs are not increasing their prices, which perhaps indicates their club's recent form as well as the impact of the recession.

Wanderers secretary John Goldsworthy said: "The increase in season ticket prices is down to main factors — increased police charges, and the fact that the club absorbed the last VAT increases without charging the customer. We can't take that any longer."

West Ham, relegated from last year's First Division, are increasing even their lowest prices by an average of 38 per cent. But Hammers fans can pay £300 to sit, while juniors, who must first join the Junior Hammers Club, can pay £225.

Arsenal are the only club interviewed to reduce their prices in response to last season's poor cup form. But a new Gunners fan cannot buy a season ticket without becoming a bond holder.

Blues fans can buy terrace tickets for £72 (£40 juniors/OAPs) before June 19. Oxford United fans can pay £104 (£52) before June 27 to stand and watch First Division football at the Manor Ground.

A stand ticket to watch Blues will cost £6 per match next season, although juniors and OAPs can sit in the family enclosure for £2.50.

Terrace prices will be £4.50 (£2.50).
