

Blues show SKY TV where it's at

CONGRATULATIONS to good old Wycombe Wanderers after the splendid match last Sunday afternoon.

At a time when many feel down, and depressed, the Wanderers come up trumps and give the local community yet another boost.

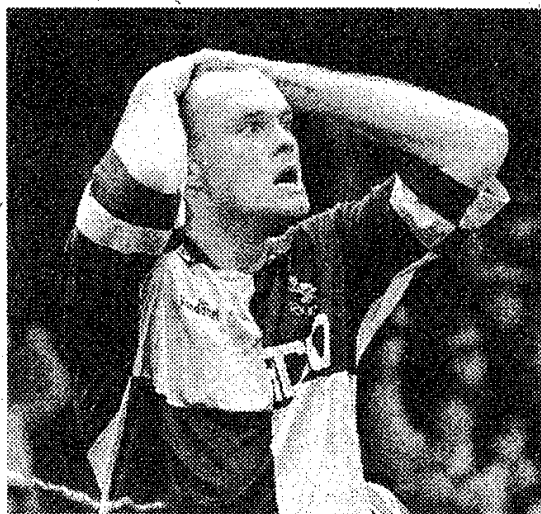

One word of criticism: I, for one, found the SKY TV commentators' patronising attitude towards Wycombe very audacious to the point of insult.

The vast majority know that Wycombe is to the west of London on the way to Oxford on the A40. If the commentators consider the general public as a bunch of morons without any geographical sense then they seriously misjudge the viewing public and football supporters in general.

Again congratulations to Martin O'Neill and the club on yet another milestone in the club's history.

IN OFF THE POST

Dear Sport,

I HAVE just witnessed the best game of football I've seen at Adams Park and there won't be many better live television games this season.

Wycombe and West Brom are two clubs who believe in football. You saw everything that's positive about the game: passing movements, individual skills and the man-against-man struggle.

The Wycombe fightback was incredible after they had looked outclassed. And let's not forget the part the crowd played in keeping the momentum going.

Albion justified their reputation as having sporting followers and for playing attractive open football. Bobby Gould's brand of kick and rush football was given a resounding thumbs-down, as he was made painfully aware.

The best moment was seeing two sets of supporters applauding each other at the end. This is what football's about. The way it used to be.
