

Scott suffers injury blow

BLUES striker Keith Scott yesterday discovered the extent of the ankle injury he suffered during Tuesday night's thriller against Slough.

X-rays confirmed that the scorer of Wycombe's winning goal has not broken his ankle.

But the swelling had to go down before ligament damage could be diagnosed.

Scott visited a specialist yesterday to find out the damage. He was hopeful that it was merely a sprain. "I can move my foot, but I may have damaged one of the ligaments. I am hoping it is only a sprain, which would put me out of action for two to three weeks.

"But if it is ligaments, it all depends on the extent of the damage," he said.

Of Tuesday night's game-clinching performance and injury blow, he said: "To score, full stop, is great, especially against them. To go off injured, there is nothing you can do about it. It is agonising because obviously you want to be playing."

Scott's recovery programme will be set by Wanderers physiotherapist Dave Jones once the extent of the ankle injury is known.
