

Fan screams Blues murder

WORKMATES left Slough Town fan David Holmes fuming with rage when they set him up as a lifelong lover of Wycombe Wanderers in the Bucks Free Press.

Even wife Karen was in on the joke when staff at NatWest Bank in High Wycombe sent his photo (left) to be published in a feature on Blues' most loyal supporters.

But David, a life vice-president of Slough Town, did not see the funny side after Wycombe beat his club to the GM Vauxhall Conference championship.

"It is very sick. Slough came so close," he stormed.

Co-worker Kate Green, of Knaves Hollow, Loudwater, said staff at the branch in Oxford Road were fed-up with him talking about Slough.

"We are absolutely sick of him tagging off Wycombe Wanderers fans," she said.

They posted copies of the article on walls. David said: "I was suspicious it was them and this only confirms it."

The hoaxers had a whip round for the £5 fee and his wife provided the picture.

She said it was a joke, but added: "I think he has taken it rather more seriously."
