

Fans fight new strip

Fans who object to Wycombe Wanderers' new strip have launched a protest in a bid to make the Blues bosses change their minds.

A sticker proclaiming: "Just say no. Keep the quarters", was slapped on chairman Ivor Beeks's car on Saturday. Protest posters and fliers were circulated at the match against Brentford.

The campaign follows a mixed reaction to Wycombe's choice of two designs, from which fans were asked to pick the club's strip for the next two seasons. But Beeks remains adamant that the club will not be swayed into choosing another strip for two years.

By Marianne Sumner

.....

"What more do they want us to do?" said Beeks yesterday. "We actually asked people which strip they liked and 65 per cent said they liked that strip, but those people who don't like it have mounted a campaign to get it out."

While most fans believe the design which was chosen is the best of the two, some are unhappy because they didn't want to move away from the present navy and light blue.

The new kit will have navy stripes, where navy quarters presently are. The design which lost the vote did have quarters and an abundance of fussy features.

Both inexplicably had new red details. Red is a colour which has never been associated with the club, and does not appear in High Wycombe's swan crest.

No change on new kit

BLUES chairman Ivor Beeks is adamant that the club will not be swayed into changing their new strip after a protest sticker was slapped on his car this week.

Stickers, posters and fliers which say 'Just say no. Keep the quarters' were circulated at last Saturday's match against Brentford.

The protest follows an extremely mixed reaction to Wycombe's choice of two kit designs from which fans were asked to pick the club's strip for the next two seasons.

But Beeks said yesterday: "What more do they want us to do. We actually asked people which strip they liked and 65 per cent said they liked that strip, but those people who don't like it have mounted a campaign to get it out."

While most fans believe the design which was chosen is the best of the two, some are unhappy because they didn't want to move away from the present navy and light blue quarter design, which was underlined by a recent Bucks Free Press poll.

The new kit will have navy stripes where navy quarters presently are. The design which lost the vote did have quarters, but it also had an abundance of fussy features, which resulted in a messy concoction.

Both inexplicably had new red details when the colour has never been associated with the club before and is not in High Wycombe's swan crest.

Beeks said the club will look at the kit again when it is redesigned in two years' time. He does not foresee reviewing it any sooner.

The protest sticker