● Just as a footnote, I'm happy that the Blues seem to have come through a slightly off-key period. Ten goals in three games puts their supporters in a better state. But I am puzzled why even a mid-table place in Division Two should be so dismal-making.

Of course it would be nice to be in the play-offs and amazing to go up yet again. But let's be realistic. It took former Isthmian League fellow travellers a lot longer than that to reach the heights. The prospects, if I read the signs correctly, are bright.

Blues never lose – now the gag's on me

MY Wycombe Wanderers' joke competition has really fizzled out – because they have suddenly started winning.

I launched my quest to find the best gag about Blues losing after they were hit by a spectacular run of defeats a few weeks back.

They lost five in six games when I decided to launch the contest.

But, as soon as the competition started, Alan Smith's team found winning ways.

They recently smashed nine goals in two games as they roared back to form in a big way.

Is it true then that Smith brandished copies of my column in the changing room before matches to spur his players on to victory?

No, I don't think so either.
But I can dream – can't I?
