

Wanderers are breathing fire

NINE goals and six points from two home games followed by a 1-0 win at fortress Walsall. Are we about to make a Rough Quest gallop into a promotion play-off place?

Such a dramatic turnaround in form and style of play has breathed new life into our season. The team have now effectively knitted together an effective combination of solid defence, stylish midfield and ruthless finishing. I hope they can continue the fun at Hull and then crush Oxford on Monday.

□ Following Alan Parry's comments in Saturday's programme, where he appeared to have some sympathy with the fans over the great shirt debate, it's time I got off the fence.

Alan states 'an overwhelming majority of fans voted in favour of a new strip'. However, this is political speak. The so-called majority only accounts for those fans that bothered to vote. The true majority declined to make an instant decision on the lesser of two evils.

The club sidestepped any debate by asking for votes to be cast on the same day as the designs were published in the programme.

Fans were also enticed to choose Kit B by the selection on 'non-entity' white shorts with Kit A.

If you don't like the new kit, simply vote with your wallet and decline to buy it. A lack of sales will soon show that when fans get 'shirty' with the club, they spend less money.
