

Former Blues captain could head for the Orient

FORMER Blues captain Terry Evans could be playing for third division Leyton Orient next season.

Evans, who was released by Blues boss John Gregory at the end of last season along with seven other Wanderers after their contracts had expired, admitted he has been talking to the Os.

"I've spoken to them and I'm going to see them again when I get back from my holiday.

"I've given them some figures and I'll see what they say when I come back," said Evans who was due to start a weeks' holiday last weekend.

"It seems like a good club, they'll be pushing for promotion next season and it's fairly local for me."

If Evans agrees a deal with the club he would again link up with former Blues goalkeeper Paul Hyde who is now at Brisbane Road.

The other seven released by Gregory were goalkeeper John Cheesewright; defender Matt Crossley, who was forced to retire from the pro game because of a back injury; midfielder Gary Patterson; David Farrell; Terry Skiverton; and youngsters Graham Hall and Anthony Clark.

All the players were released on free transfers.
