

Lady luck playing its tricks on Wanderers

LADY Luck has certainly been blessing the Blues with mixed fortunes lately.

Last week we were lucky to beat Southend by such a flattering 4-1 scoreline. Then on Sunday, we were equally lucky to escape from Watford with just a 2-1 defeat – another very flattering scoreline.

Mind you, we were unlucky to lose the services of 'Bruce' Forsyth so early on and Paul Read was out of luck when his late header hit the bar.

On the other hand, quite literally, Steve Brown made a great save to prevent a certain goal and Watford managed to hit the bar more times than some Arsenal players!

However, our main dose of bad luck has definitely been our list of injuries. Losing Jason Cousins has unbalanced the defence, whilst Rhino and Scottie have been missed in midfield and upfront. Let's hope 'Bruce' is not a long term casualty – especially with Nicky Mohan's loan period finishing after tomorrow's match.

On balance though, I'd settle for Lady Luck continuing to give us the same share of good fortune for the rest of the season.

Full marks to Watford for producing an excellent programme with plenty of interesting reading matter. The two pages of statistics on Watford and Wycombe performances this season, and all other division two clubs, was an especially good read.

I had just worked out that we have conceded a high percentage of goals in the first 30 minutes and Watford had scored several goals in the first 15 minutes when they went ahead – after just six minutes. Who said you can't trust statistics?

A similar feature would be a useful addition to our programme. How about it Adrian Wood – can we have a Stats page as a regular feature?

What an excellent turn out for the U21 match on Tuesday – shame the game didn't live up to expectations. Hopefully, the club should have made a few bob on the night. Not as much as the FA though, judging by the chauffeur-driven limousines in the car park!
