

Wanderers boss facing touchline ban

TONIGHT'S match at home to Walsall could be manager John Gregory's last from the touchline.

The Blues boss is facing a dug-out ban or an FA fine following comments he made to referee Steve Bennett after Wanderers match against Preston.

He has been ordered by the FA to explain himself.

Gregory said: "I have written back to them and I am awaiting sentence."

The FA are unlikely to go easy on him. Gregory has been in trouble with them before. He received an FA rap when he was coach at Aston Villa after complaining about referee Paul Danson's handling of a match.

Gregory said: "It's not big and it's not clever and unfortunately I will probably pay the penalty. But I cannot say that I regret the comments I made after the Preston game. I just have to say what I think. Referees are not always right. I thought his handling of the game was poor and he was unapproachable."
