

Boring, they are not

WELL at least nobody can say Wanderers are having a boring season.

After 16 league games we've seen a total of 53 goals scored, unfortunately 27 at the wrong end. That's an average of 3.3 goals per game, above par for the Nationwide League.

Tuesday evening's 4-2 reversal at Plymouth makes that one of our most frequent scoreline's this season. Three games have now finished 4-2, with three others ending with a 1-0 result.

Our erratic form has provided a roller-coaster ride up and down the league table and we've already occupied almost every position between third and 17th.

Although we've managed to score 26 league goals, these have come from only a handful of players – thank heavens for Mark Stallard.

With a third of the season completed, Jason Kavanagh is the only defender to score a league goal and, before Steve McGavin's effort last Saturday, John Cornforth was the only midfielder to find the opposition net.

Successful sides depend on a regular goal contribution from defenders and midfielders. Come on lads, it's about time one of you found the net – is it worth a spread bet at York on Saturday?

According to the Villa fan who called David Mellor on 606 last Saturday, things have gone downhill since Gregory left. Was Gareth Southgate's outburst part of a Bring Back JG Campaign? Let's hope not. Life at Adams Park is far more exciting than a UEFA Cup run – honest John!
