Issues are not Adams Park evils

I FEEL compelled to reply to the article in The Blues News (May 1) entitled You Could Do Worse which was written by Alan Parry.

I am most concerned that he should have stated that all I write about 'are the evils that I believe exist at Adams Park', he also asked whether I thought they did anything right.

In response to his article, I would like to put the record straight. I do not criticise individual players at the club, or the management. I have used my columns to put forward views and ideas that have been suggested to me by fellow supporters.

I do not believe that articles about safety issues, The Task Force, The Hillsborough campaign, pricing structures for away fans, the seating of the away end at Adams Park, the Anti-Racism Campaign, and charity events that WWISC are holding can be construed as me exposing the evils that go on at Adams Park.

I am fully aware that Mr Parry read the article I wrote earlier in the season regarding the club trying to blame the fans for the financial situation at Adams Park, because they don't buy enough merchandise.

This was written just after our defeat at Basingstoke, when another director stated that he would like all the young people in Wycombe to wear the WWFC strip and not Premier League colours.

What I clearly said was that young people want success, and want to emulate their heroes, hence kids wearing Premier League shirts and not the shirts of a team who had just been knocked out of the FA Cup by non-league opposition.

Mr Parry was obviously annoyed that the BFP printed this article but the fact is that everyone who spoke to me about the article supported my views.

I firmly believe that all football supporters have the right to put forward their point of view, I have written to Ivor Beeks on numerous occasions and have always received a prompt reply.

There was some discussion that WWISC should attend the meeting that the OSC hold with the directors, unfortunately the OSC voted against this, so it seems that Mr Parry will have to continue criticising WWISC and myself through his usual channels next season.
