Give supporters real control

HAVING followed Wycombe Wanderers FC since a youngster in the seventies I would first like to congratulate Lawrie Sanchez on his recent appointment as manager of The Blues.

Unfortunately, he doesn't seem to have the luck some new managers are blessed with but I'm certain that will change. I cannot remember the last time we played three up front and it certainly makes for more entertainment.

My letter is mainly critical of the powers that be at Adams Park who invariably blame lack of support for the financial predicament we are told we are in.

Many supporters spend hundreds of pounds of their hard earned money following the team who still, up to the time of writing, haven't won away in the league, to away games.

But what do the chairman and directors contribute to the coffers?

Surely our chairman and directors could, between them, buy a good player after consultation with the manager.

It certainly amazes me and no doubt many other supporters, that with Bucks being one of the richest counties in Britain we don't encourage more backers.

Perhaps we should follow the direction of Bournemouth FC who when in a similar position, were taken over by a supporters consortium, and look at them now.

Perhaps other supporters will give their views in the BFP.

Let's have a forum to get things moving now.

Look after your own fans

WHEN will Wycombe Wanderers learn?

Why are the club's loyal supporters treated like second-class citizens?

Once again on Saturday, gate three remained closed at the end of the match and old age pensioners and young children from the family enclosure were forced to trek right round the ground to get home.

Tempers ran high as home fans argued with stewards long after

The disappointment of the result when Colchester snatched a draw from a disputed penalty in the seventh minute of time added on, didn't help the situation.

But with this policy Wycombe will lose fans in droves.

My wife and I will not be renewing our season tickets next season even though I firmly believe that Lawrie Sanchez will still pull off the great escape.

Wake up Wycombe!
