WANDERERS boss Lawrie Sanchez has told fans it's now or never to get behind his team as they face the first of three matches crucial to their second division survival.

Sanchez wants supporters to turn up in their droves at Adams Park tomorrow to back his team to the hilt when they take on Blackpool and attempt the great escape – and he believes they can do it.

Sanchez believes two wins and a draw will be sufficient to keep Blues up.

The battling boss said: "If the people of Wycombe don't turn up tomorrow, then maybe Alan Parry is right. We've had a spell away and now we're coming home for our next two games and I want people to get behind us."

The boss was already putting Tuesday night's 1-0 defeat at Notts County behind him as he prepared for tomorrow's encounter, describing that loss as a mere hiccup.

"Our run has been brilliant, the lads have done really well to get where they are and I think that defeat at Notts County has just focussed our minds."

Sanchez insists the battle for survival is now a three-horse race between third-from-bottom Wanderers, Northampton and Oldham, both of whom are just one point better off than the Blues.
