

Was this the moment Blues lost £50,000 payout? Boss Sanchez thinks it was WANDERERS chairman Ivor Beeks has wished Huddersfield Town good luck as the Yorkshire side consider suing the Football League after referee Jeff Winter refused them a penalty in their Worthington Cup defeat.

It happened on the same night that Wycombe's Andy Baird was denied an even clearer penalty by referee Ray Olivier in Blues' 2-1 FA Cup defeat at Wigan.

Boss Lawrie Sanchez says the decision cost them a £50,000 pay day from a potential third round clash against Wolves.

Beeks said: "I hope Huddersfield succeed."

But he said Blues will not follow the same route.

He said: "The losses involved if they lose will be a damn sight more than £50,000."

Huddersfield chairman Ian Ayre said: "We're talking to our lawyers about compensation for not being in the next round."
