

FA to investigate coin-throwing incident

WANDERERS fans are at the centre of a second FA investigation after an alleged coin throwing incident at last Saturday's match against Bournemouth.

Cherries keeper Gareth Stewart claims he was hit on the side of the head by an object thrown from the terrace during the second half of Wanderers' 3-0 defeat and Bournemouth are demanding action.

Referee Phil Dowd did not see anything and booked Stewart for time-wasting but Bournemouth have taken the matter further and reported it to the FA.

Cherries boss Sean O'Driscoll said: "When a visiting goalkeeper gets hit with something, somebody is going to pay.

"We have spoken with Wycombe who want to catch the culprit as much as we do because next time it could hit somebody in the eye. If that happened and we hadn't put a report in we would feel bad about it."

It is the second time this term that Blues' fans have been in trouble with the FA.

Earlier in the campaign they were let off with a stern warning, on account of their previous good record, after a supporter hurled a cup of tea at referee Chris Foy during the Bristol Rovers home defeat.

Blues secretary Keith Allen said: "The club are very concerned at what appears to be a deterioration in the behaviour of a certain small section of our support behind the goal.

"We take the situation very seriously and if the allegations are proven and we find the culprit we will take the appropriate action."
