

The video that's a must for any Blues fan, and you can win one

'SIX ties and a semi-final' is a must-have for all Wanderers fans.

The video charts the story of Wycombe's remarkable run to the semi-finals of the FA Cup with goals, action and interviews from the first round win over Harrow all the way through to that semi-final defeat against Liverpool.

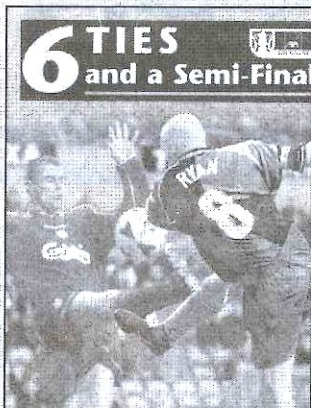

It includes never-seen-before footage from Steve Brown's personal video diary as well as interviews with some of the main players such as Roy Essandoh, who scored the quarter-final winner at Leicester after answering an advert on teletext.

With much of the footage coming from Sky Sports and ITV the quality is considerably better than most end-of-season videos, which tend to be watched once and then left to collect dust.

This one is different. It is a film you will want to watch again and again and no matter how many times you watch it, it will still make the hairs on the back of your neck stand up.

You can relive the tremendous win at Grimsby when Blues successfully negotiated their way through the third round for the first time in their history, then settle back to watch Sam Parkin's header slay Wolves.

But the video really hots up when it gets to the fifth round games against Wimbledon when Wanderers director and Sky Sports commentator Alan Parry has an emotional fit on air as ten-man Wycombe beat the Dons in a penalty shootout drama.

Hear his voice break up with excitement as he completely forgets the commentator's rule of impartiality and gets carried away with the moment.

Then re-live that quarter-final victory at Leicester when Essandoh went from zero to hero with his injury time winner and Steve Brown was sent off.

The action moves on apace to the semi-final and there are interviews with fans and players as well as all the key points from the game.

Whether you're watching it on your own or with your mates, this video will bring all the emotions racing back and make you proud to be a Wanderer.

It does not and could not, in its one hour and 25 minutes, capture all the drama and it does have some annoying traits, like cutting to the club crest and talking about results of matches before showing the action, but as an abridged souvenir of the greatest year in Wycombe's history it's a winner.

The video is available from Wanderers In Town and Adams Park priced £19.99 including a semi-final programme. But you can win your very own copy simply by answering two easy questions in our Bucks Free Press competition.

We have teamed up with Wanderers and have got three copies to give away.
