

It's no go for Jacko after boss discovers the cost of out-of-favour skipper

WANDERERS have ruled themselves out of the race to sign Norwich centre half Matt Jackson after discovering how much money he is on at Carrow Road.

Blues boss Lawrie Sanchez enquired about the transfer-listed Canaries skipper on Wednesday but abandoned his interest when he learned how much the former Everton FA Cup winner is paid in wages.

Sanchez said: "I made an enquiry about him but my interest stopped when I found out how much he earned."

Jackson, who wants to stay in the first division, only signed a new improved two-year contract at Carrow Road four months ago but is now being frozen out after a major bust-up with boss Nigel Worthington and has been dumped in the reserves.

Sanchez could now turn his attention to Bohemian centre half Shaun Maher.

The boss saw the former Fulham centre half in Champions League action for the Irish champions earlier this summer and will cast his eye over the 23-year-old 6ft 2in defender again when Blues play Bohemian in the second game of their Irish tour on Sunday afternoon at Dallymount Park.

Sanchez said: "I've seen him play and I'm keen to have another look at him."
