

Laughter is best for the Blues

WYCOMBE Wanderers are laughing their way up the league.

The Blues have wiped the smile off their oponents with new stress busting tactics on the way to their last two away matches.

They relieved the tension on their way to Bristol by cranking up the humour and making fun of their desperate situation as they were stuck in the M4 siege traffic jams and arrived at the ground just five minutes before the original scheduled kick off time.

Then on Tuesday, striker

Gavin Holligan soothed the mood ahead of Blues' daunting trip into Colchester's hostile Layer Road lair by taking over the piano at the team's hotel and playing an impromptu 45 minute gig.

Assistant boss Terry Gibson said: "None of us even knew he could play the piano. He just got up and started playing. He was brilliant. He told us afterwards that he's been playing since he was five and he certainly relaxed the boys."

Saturday's goal-hero Jermaine McSporran reckons

Wanderers' gallows humour on their nightmare coach trip was a factor in their 1-0 victory at Ashton Gate.

He said: "We knew we were going to be late so we didn't bother worrying about it. We just relaxed and cracked some jokes."
