

Rambo's out for the count

WANDERERS: Andy Rammell was left inconsolable as he was told his season was over this week.

The Wanderers goal machine, who has averaged a goal in every two league matches this season, goes into hospital tomorrow for an operation on his injured left ankle and boss Lawrie Sanchez is resigned to being without him for the rest of the campaign.

Rammell said: "I've been really beating myself up over this. The season was going so well for me and now it looks like it's over."

Rambo sustained the injury at QPR in December and dismissed it as bruising.

He said: "I iced it and thought it was ok. I tried to play against Fulham but it kept locking and I was in excruciating pain."

An MRI scan revealed he had chipped his bone.

It means Blues fans will have to wait until August to see the potentially explosive partnership between Rammell and Devine.

Rammell said: "It's frustrating. I've just got to knuckle down and get the operation out of the way."

Wasps move back on?

RUGBY: Wasps' on-off move to Wycombe Wanderers is back on again this week after the two parties held productive talks at Adams Park on Tuesday.

Chairman Ivor Beeks admitted that he is now more confident than ever that a deal can be struck with the Zurich Premiership rugby side.

He said: "I'm more confident after our meeting that we can do a deal with Wasps."

He revealed that the two parties are discussing a two-year deal with a view to a longer period after that.

Further talks are planned next week and it is now a two-horse race between Wanderers and rugby side Harlequins to play hosts to Wasps next season.

Beeks confirmed that if Wasps do move in, Wycombe would install undersoil heating and lay a continental style Desso pitch.
