ask their questions."

But before that summit meeting he wants the fans to give the team their full backing starting with tomorrow's match at home to Plymouth and continuing with Tuesday's Worthington Cup match at Sheffield United.

He said: "Let's put all the differences behind us until the meeting. Now is the time to get behind the team and then let's have a full discussion."

Sanchez received several letters from fans this week and read them all.

He said: "I would say it is about two-to-one on average saying keep your head up, but I've had letters of criticism as well.

"The views of the purists of Wycombe Wanderers haven't gone unnoticed.

"I have taken on board what people have said. Entertaining is part and parcel of my business. My job here is not to displease fans and be booed off.

"We've built up a fan base here. I've had a good relationship with the supporters in my time here and it saddens me that it has been tarnished.

"The biggest problem is that we haven't won. If we were top people would have gone with it."

The situation reached a head 10 days ago with fans booing the side when they were leading Crewe 1-0 in a game they went on to lose.

Some of the boo-boys have since said they weren't booing to get rid of the manager, but were protesting at the side's long-ball tactics.

Fans will have to wait until tomorrow to see if there will be any immediate changes in the style of play, but there will be a change in shape as Wanderers bid to arrest a slide of four straight league defeats.

The Chairboys will revert to a 4-4-2 formation as they chase a win to lift them out of 20th position in the table.

Mark Rogers is out with a groin strain for the visit of a Plymouth side who arrive fresh from snatching an injury-time draw off Division Two new leaders Cardiff City on Tuesday.

Blues chief scout Alan Fogarty has watched the Pilgrims twice this week but Sanchez is more concerned about his own eleven.

He said: "It's not them I'm worried about. It is all about what we do. We need to score goals at one end and stop them at the other and so far we haven't been able to get both elements right.

"But we've had a good week in training, we had a good chat, we have done a lot of work on a few things and the players are very buoyant."

The fans forum will take place in the Vere Suite at Adams Park on Monday, October 14 at 8.30pm, immediately after the club's AGM.

LAWRIE Sanchez is offering his knockers a no-holds-barred session to debate the team's tactics.

The Blues boss has reacted to recent criticism of his style of play by pledging an open debate at the Fans' Forum at Adams Park on October 14.

And it won't just be an exercise in diplomatic relations.

Sanchez said: "I'm like an MP to some extent. You have to listen to the views of your constituents.

"I'm giving the fans an open invitation to talk about it. I want to listen to them. Let's have a debate.

"I'm saying to the people on the websites, who hide behind silly names, to come down here and have a proper discussion. I want them and everyone else to
