

Embarrassed at so-called fans

I HAVE just returned from watching Wycombe play Cheltenham Town and was ashamed and embarrassed to stand on the same terracing as the "fans" around me.

"Sanchez we don't want you"
"Sanchez Out, Sanchez Out"
"Sack the Board" and "Brownie for Gaffer".

This was a small selection of the chants echoing around the ground throughout the match. There was also a Sanchez Out banner and one referring to the Sean Devine transfer.

I have listened to the arguments for and against the transfer and although initially somewhat alarmed, am now not really surprised that the transfer has been allowed.

I have followed the Chairboys for over ten years and feel like I've kicked or headed every single ball during the highs and heartbreaks during he reigns of successive managers.

I personally have nothing but admiration and respect for Lawrie Sanchez and for the success he has brought to Wycombe Wanderers and I can only hope that mob rule is not allowed to affect the running of our club.

Is it me though or is it the same "mob" that were worshipping at the shrine of Lawrie Sanchez not so very long ago?

Now I do not live my life wearing rose tinted spectacles and would be the first to admit that the standard of football recently has not always been the most flattering.

However, at each match I go to there are probably several thousand budding "armchair" managers in attendance, each believing that they know what's best for Wycombe Wanderers.

I for one am glad that there is only one manager and am hopeful that it will remain Lawrie Sanchez for some considerable time to come.

To hear the abuse being meted out today, including one clown comparing Lawrie with an earlier manager (whose name I can't even bring myself to utter) absolutely breaks my heart.

Of course I realise that everyone is entitled to their opinion and as you will have gathered the above opinions, although not popular in some quarters of High Wycombe, are mine.

Is it too much to ask for all fellow Wanderers to support the team, to have faith in the manager and the Board and not to treat everything with the same suspicion as if it's the latest spin being leaked from number 10 Downing Street?
