

Former Wanderers whizzkid nets Blues another £10,000

FORMER Wanderers schoolboy Michael Malcolm netted the Blues another £10,000 last week when he made his debut for England U18 against Switzerland.

His appearance earned the Blues another £10,000 on top of the £40,000 they have already received by selling him to Tottenham.

Blues earned £10,000 when he first went, another £10,000 when he signed as a scholar and a further £20,000 when he turned pro.

And the signs are that Malcolm will continue to make Wycombe money up to a limit of £475,000.

Wycombe are due another £15,000 if he breaks into the England U21 team and a further £3,000 for the first ten games he plays at that level.

Blues are also due another

£25,000 when Malcom makes his Spurs debut with another £100,000 coming after ten first team games.

Further £100,000 payments are due when he makes 20 and 40 appearances for Spurs.

If he breaks into the full England team Wanderers get another £50,000.

Wycombe could also cash in if Tottenham sell him on again, with the Blues entitled to ten per cent of the fee.

Wanderers first spotted Malcolm when he was a 14-year-old playing for Harrow side Belmont. But they couldn't keep hold of him as Tottenham soon came calling.

And he is now pushing for a place in the first team after scoring for Spurs Reserves last week against West Ham.

Michael Malcolm