

Man Utd kid blows Wanderers' chance

FORMER Manchester United youngster John Cogger blew his chance of a career at Adams Park when he turned up for a trial match 20 minutes after it had started.

The jinxed defender, who was released by the Old Trafford giants at Christmas, got lost on his way to the ground and missed the kick off as Wanderers reserves went down 5-0 to QPR at Northwood on Wednesday.

It was the second false start the youngster has suffered with Blues. Two weeks earlier he withdrew from Wanderers reserves match against Barnet after twisting his ankle the day before.

And Cogger didn't wait to be told by Wanderers staff that he had no future at Adams Park, making his own mind up to leave.

He said: "I got there an hour late and then when I did get on the pitch I had an absolute beast.

"Peter Cawley [reserve boss] was very good and put me on as soon as I got there but I bet he wishes he never bothered now.

"I had a bad game and if I was Wycombe I wouldn't take me on. I had three years at Old Trafford but no-one watching that game would ever have thought so."

Wanderers boss Lawrie Sanchez said: "He has decided to try his luck up north."
