

Wanderers will pursue City for their missing Devine cash

WANDERERS say they will pursue crisis-club Exeter City for the remainder of the Sean Devine transfer fee.

The Grecians have defaulted on the second £10,000 chunk of the striker's transfer fee and Wanderers will chase the cash even though it could put the Devonians out of business.

Blues secretary Keith Allen said: "We entered into an agreement with Exeter City for Sean Devine and Wycombe Wanderers will pursue every penny of it.

"We did a deal in good faith and we expect to receive our money."

Wycombe have so far received just £30,000 from The Grecians, who are on the brink of closure with debts of £2 million.

They should have received a further £10,000 on April 19 when Devine played his 20th game for the westcountry men but that money has not been forthcoming.

Wanderers have reported the Grecians, who were relegated to the Conference on the last day of the season to the Football League, and demanded that the monies be taken from Exeter's parachute payment.

But that looks unlikely. Wycombe are a long way down a big list of creditors and it is thought that the parachute money will run out long before it gets to Wycombe's case.

Blues' best chance of getting their hands on the money would be if Exeter sold Devine.

If that happens, the Blues would receive the remainder of the £75,000 deal they would have got if Devine's goals had helped Exeter stay in the Football League last season.
