

The name-dropping Blues get Adams' vote

ROBERT Adams has backed Wanderers' decision to rename Adams Park the Causeway Stadium.

He told Wycombe Wanderers' official website that his grandfather Frank Adams would not have minded Wanderers changing the name to suit their newest sponsors.

He said: "I am sure my grandfather would have been in full agreement with the change of name. As nice as it is to see our name in print and on the TV, the survival of the club is most important factor

"Ivor Beeks has done a great job as chairman and if he and his directors feel that this step should be taken then they have my backing.

"Rugby is my sport and I visit the ground to watch Wasps and think it is brilliant.

"It is a lovely facility where you can watch the action really closely and in comfort. When my grandfather presented the deeds of Loakes Park to the club in 1947 it was because he wanted the name of Wycombe Wanderers to continue.

"If by taking this step it means the club will benefit then I do not have a problem. I feel certain my grandfather would have held the same view."

But the statement will do little to pacify Wanderers fans who have called on the directors who made the decision to resign.
