

Gorman happy to stay with Blues

JOHN Gorman has promised to give Tony Adams his full support even though the former England and Arsenal legend beat him to the manager's job.

Gorman will now work alongside Adams in an advisory role.

He said: "I'm hoping I can help him as well with my experience. He's got great connections with Arsenal and I've got good connections with Tottenham so maybe we can bring people in to help the club."

And he backed the appointment of Adams, who he coached when he was England's assistant manager.

He said: "It's brilliant for the club. I just want to help Tony and he wants me to be there."

"I've worked with Tony when

I've been his coach and he's been a player.

"He's been one of the best captains that ever played for England."

And he added: "I hope Tony is the right man to lead Wycombe because I just want this club to do well. I'm going to give Tony every bit of support. I will be 110 per cent behind him."

"I've told him that in no uncertain terms. I just want to help Wycombe that has always been my goal."

"All I want is for Wycombe Wanderers to get off the bottom and if we can get a couple of players in we can definitely move up the league."

"I just wish I could have got a few more points to have given him a better start."

Mr Nice Guy talks himself out of the job

JOHN Gorman believes he talked himself out of the Wycombe Wanderers job by being too honest.

The former England assistant manager was asked by Wanderers what he would do if his sidekick Glenn Hoddle asked him to be his right hand man again and Gorman said he would have to consider it.

He said: "I've said all along I wanted the job but I was honest and told them that if Glenn wanted me to go and work with him again I would have to consider it."

"And to be fair to Wycombe they want someone who is going to be there and stabilise the club."

"The players have had enough upheaval not knowing who the manager is going to be and it has been hard for them."

"I think if I had really gone for it and if the results like Swindon had gone in our favour the job would possibly be mine but the results went against us not the performances."

Now Gorman is excited at the prospect of working underneath a player he once coached.

He said: "As a leader he was unbeatable. He's come through so many hard things in his life and those qualities will hopefully rub off on the club."
