

Deadline Day has left us all in a daze

I'M totally bewildered by the events happening at Wanderers this week, and I think all the boys are.

No-one expected to see Jermaine McSporran being allowed to leave the club this week plus all the talk that Darren Currie might be on his way.

It certainly seems a strange one losing your top goalscorer for nothing at this time of the season.

But all the players wish Jocky well and hope the move goes well for him. It's a great chance for him to play in the first division.

I am sure the manager has something up his sleeve and we will all have to wait and see what develops.

It's been a strange situation because transfer deadline days at Wycombe are normally quiet affairs.

But it was different yesterday with McSporran at Walsall having his medical and all the speculation about where Darren might end up.

It's been a very strange time at the club this week. The end of an era if you like with physios Dave Jones and Terry Evans announced they will be leaving.

The club will be different without all four of them. They are all big characters and the dressing room will be different now.

It's a difficult time for everyone at the club and a transitional time and who is to say there won't be plenty more changes in the summer.

I love this football club. It has been close to my heart ever since I first came into the dressing room and it will be very hard for me to walk away at the end of the season.

I always said this would be my last season but the nearer to the end it is coming the more I realise how much I love the club.

It has been such a big part of my life and sometimes I think I wouldn't take much convincing if I was asked to stay on.
