

Blues' away support is rewarded

EVERYTHING comes to those that wait, eventually!

At the twenty-fourth time of asking, Wanderers, loyal travelling band had a precious away victory to celebrate on Saturday night. Despite waiting for over a year and relegation still looking a certainty, Wanderers fans were, for once, able to enjoy their long journey home.

As well as the morale boosting win and three much needed points, all three goals at Oldham were scored by our two strikers. Could Craig Faulconbridge and Nathan Tyson be the elusive goalscoring duo we've have been searching for?

Sharing five goals in the last four games is certainly an encouraging start.

If the Falcon can keep playing to the same standard he has shown recently and build a successful striking partnership with Typhoon Tyson, he could find himself being taken off Tony Adams list of bargain basement offers.

More good news this week was the announcement that Wanderers and Wasps have agreed an extension to their groundshare deal for at least another year. The extra revenue this brings to the club is vital given the current, and projected, financial position. Hopefully some of this money will find its way into Tony Adams budget.

Even with the boost of three points at Oldham, and hopefully another win against Port Vale on Saturday, any hopes of avoiding the drop still look extremely optimistic.

Big Tony certainly seems to have decided it's time to offload some of the existing squad and start building a new one for life in Division Three.

Over the last few weeks, the gates at Adams Park seem to have been replaced with a revolving door. A long string of squad members have already been sent spinning out of the door and disappearing down Hillbottom Road.

Jocky McSporran, once touted as likely to be Wanderers first million pound transfer sale, managed to negotiate the rapidly revolving door and found himself on the M6 at Walsall.

Meanwhile, Darren Currie managed to mistime his exit and found himself back inside Adams Park.

The reappearance of Mark Rogers at right back proves that revolving doors work both ways. When he went out on long term loan I, like many other fans, thought that would be the last we would see of him in a Wanderers shirt. Welcome back Ted!

Richard Harris seems to have been very unlucky, when he stepped into the revolving door it turned into a Time Machine. According to the club's website on Wednesday morning, poor old Bomber appears to have been sent back in time to play for Maidenhead in the Isthmian League. Hopefully, with a bit of quick time travel, Bomber will really be playing in the Ryman Premier on Saturday!

Finally, it was sad to hear that both Dave Jones and Terry Evans will be leaving at the end of the season. The pair have given great service to the club and supported a number of different management teams during their many years at Wycombe.

Many past and present Wycombe players owe an awful lot to Jonah and Big Tel for their dedication and commitment.
