

Storms wreak havoc at Wycombe's ground

WANDERERS are counting the cost of the storms which ripped through the club on Tuesday causing £30,000 worth of damage.

Offices and bars were left standing in water as parts of the ceilings collapsed in the main stand.

Assistant manager Peter Cawley's office looks like a bomb's hit it, while the dressing rooms, players' gymnasium and the boardroom were also badly hit by the storm.

Acting chief executive Rod Tomlin said: "I was sitting in my office and heard a scream as two people ran for cover from the commercial office as the ceiling collapsed and a deluge of water came in."

Suzie Clarke who was working at her desk at the time said: "It started off as just drip, drip, drip and then it all came through."

Some computer equipment was ruined in the downpour which struck at various spots along the main stand and papers were left floating on the floor.

The boardroom looks set to be out of action for tomorrow's first game of the season against Cambridge United while boss Tony Adams will also have to find somewhere new to hold his post match press conference.

Wanderers are confident that the bars in the main stand will be operating as usual tomorrow but have asked supporters to show patience.
