

Perpetuini could be in Blues squad

EX-WATFORD and Gillingham ace David Perpetuini could be added to the Blues squad for tomorrow's trip to Shrewsbury Town.

The injury-jinxed midfielder has been battling to save his career after a cruciate injury and Blues boss John Gorman has offered him the chance to save his career.

Perpetuini was dumped by Championship side Gillingham earlier this season after failing to recapture his form and fitness following a cruciate injury.

Gorman let him train with Wanderers and has now included him in the last two reserve team friendlies and is now thinking of taking it further.

He starred in the reserve's 2-1 win over Northampton on Tuesday and Gorman now thinks he could be a good addition to the Wanderers squad providing he maintains his progress.

Gorman now intends including the 25-year-old left sided player in the travelling party for tomorrow's trip to Gay Meadow although he stressed that he might not make the 16.

He said: "He has done really well and it will be a big boost for him."

But for Perpetuini to become more than a passenger and to take a seat on the subs bench, he would have to be signed on a non-contract basis by midday today.
