

Antwi Will want get into the Blues team

Ready and willing: Will Antwi in action for Aldershot

Blues' new boy wants to play wherever he can

WANDERERS new boy Will Antwi is determined to make a name for himself in Wycombe – no matter what position he plays in.

Antwi will sign for John Gorman's side on Monday and the 6ft 3ins youngster is prepared to slot in either a defence or midfield position.

He said: "All I have in mind is I want to work as hard as I can, get in the team and try to keep my place. I go there under no expectations."

"I want to better myself as a player."

Antwi began his career as a trainee at Crystal Palace but, after being released by the South London club, he moved to Sweden to play for second division outfit Ljungskile.

He said: "I was glad to be released by Palace. I was a Palace player but only in name."

"I wasn't really that cut up because what you want is to play on Saturday at three o'clock."

He then had a spell with QPR but didn't manage to catch the eye of boss Ian Holloway.

He said: "The manager was a bit preoccupied. I played a couple of games for the reserves but they weren't really in the market."

It was during his three-month stint in Scandinavia that Antwi found his niche in midfield and he responded by scoring seven goals in ten games.

And he believes his Swedish experience helped him to progress as a player and a person.

He said: "It was great. You learn a lot about life and the standard of football was very good."

Antwi returned to England and joined Aldershot where he was eventually moved back into defence.

The Conference side offered the 22-year-old a new contract but he thought his footballing education was best served under Gorman.

He said: "When I went down to watch the boys train, I liked the atmosphere and it looked like somewhere where my football could thrive."
