

Wanderers look to set to pull out of proposed Salako job share agreement

WANDERERS look set to pull out of a move for former England wideman John Salako.

The Chairboys are unlikely to take former England man John Salako on after they were unable to agree a job-share compromise with Sky Sports.

Blues had been hoping to thrash out a jobshare deal with the TV giants, who have signed the 35-year-old former Fulham, Crystal Palace and Coventry wideman up as a pundit.

But with Sky wanting him on their Saturday show and also employing him on Tuesday nights, Wanderers manager John Gorman now thinks the idea is looking like it will have to be scrapped as a non-runner.

He said: "John Salako will continue to train with us but it is unlikely that he will sign a contract."
