

Ten-pin bowling will help Wanderers strike back

WANDERERS are hoping to strike back in the promotion race tomorrow after taking a trip to the bowling alley.

Blues boss John Gorman took the team ten-pin bowling after training on Tuesday in a bid to get his team back on track.

He went for the team-bonding session and meal in Maidenhead after three defeats in the last four matches knocked Wycombe out of the automatic promotion places for the first time since September.

He said: "I just felt they needed something different. None of the lads knew about it. They turned up for training as usual and were quite pleasantly surprised to be taken bowling."

Midfielder Matt Bloomfield said: "It was just what we needed. Everyone was gutted after losing on Saturday and we had been stewing over the result.

"It was good to have a change of routine, there was plenty of banter flying around and that will help us."

And, in another boost for Gorman, his strikers, who have not scored a goal between them in the last four matches, rediscovered their striking form to win the bowling day with the defenders second, midfield third and management and staff last.
