

Matt finish: Matt Bloomfield's goal spurred Blues on to their first point on Saturday Pic supplied

'Cracks is best man for job'

MATT Bloomfield has called on his personal fan club to get behind the team and new skipper David McCracken.

Wanderers have been booed off by a section of their own support at half time in their last two matches and some supporters have refused to accept manager Paul Lambert's decision to give McCracken the captain's armband.

But fans favourite Bloomfield wants to put an end to the arguments and has called for a united front.

He said: "Cracks is the best man for the job. He makes a fantastic captain, he's a great bloke off the pitch and a good leader on it.

"I'm fully behind him like all the lads are and I'm delighted for him.

"One day if the honour came my way, I would be delighted to be captain but at the moment I'm right behind Cracks and I'm more than happy that he's the one that's leading the team out.

"The supporters should get behind him. We all need to be pulling in the same direction - management, players and supporters - and unless we are nothing will be achieved.

"Promotion has always been our aim and I 100 per cent believe we can get it."

The midfielder believes Saturday's back-from-the-dead 2-2 draw at Dagenham, when his goal coupled with Jermaine Easter's 95th-minute spot kick gave Blues an unlikely point, could be the turning point.

He said: "I think that the belief getting that late goal has given us will give us a huge lift and the one thing the supporters can see is that we don't give up.

"There is obviously disappointment that we were two goals down but we didn't give up.

"We always believed we could get back into the game and I believe we will kick on from here."
