

YOUNG CURSES HIS LUCK

WANDERERS keeper Jamie Young is facing what could be a lengthy spell on the sidelines after tearing his hamstring in Saturday's 1-1 draw with Shrewsbury.

The Australian glovesman, who will have a scan today, was one of four Wanderers injured in the match which saw Wycombe extend their unbeaten run to three matches.

Sam Stockley was the first to suffer.

The defender was forced off before half time with a back problem.

Midfielder Gary Holt followed soon afterwards with a suspected dead leg after a crunching tackle and Russell Martin lost a tooth – for the second time against Shrewsbury – when he was elbowed by Michael Symes.

But Young's injury looks like being the worst of the lot.

The keeper who has only just won his place back in the side collapsed in his area after trying to clear the ball.

He said: "I am gutted. I have never pulled a muscle in my life before and for it to happen now is devastating.

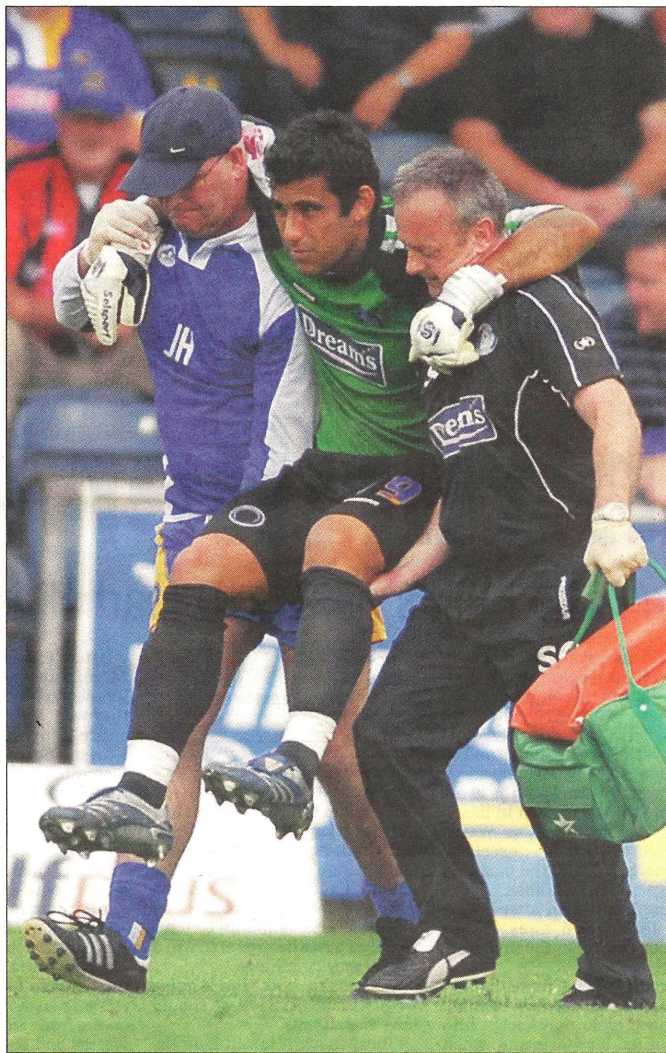

"I had just got my place in the team, I was doing well and was hoping to have a long run in the side, now this happens."

Young was the last player to leave the Wycombe dressing room after the game and emerged on a pair of crutches.

He said: "When it happened I couldn't walk. I had to be carried off the pitch by both team's physios.

"It sucks. I don't know how long I am going to be out. It will be ready when it's ready I guess. I've never been in this position before and hopefully I will be a quick healer.

"This a real setback for me. I wanted so much more. The manager had given me a real opportunity by playing me and I really wanted to repay him."
