Former Wanderers schoolboy returns to Adams Park in a loan deal

WANDERERS boss Peter Taylor has brought Welsh U21 striker Simon Church back to Adams Park on a month's loan from Reading – five years after the Royals poached him from their school of excellence.

Reading splashed £20,000 to pluck the then 14-year-old Wycombe youngster away from Adams Park, but Blues have got him back now, albeit only on loan.

Church (pictured) has represented Wales at U21 level, scoring against Bosnia and Herzegovina and has also had loans at Crewe and Yeovil last year.

Taylor is delighted to get him after a week in which he terminated the contract of Leon Knight and let John Sutton return to Scotland with Motherwell.

Taylor said: "We're a bit skinny in the forwards department at the moment and he fits the bill for me.

"He's a very hard-working centre forward and I'm really delighted that Steve Coppell has agreed to let him come out for a month."

Taylor is hoping that he may be able to extend the loan beyond the initial four weeks and he revealed that he is still in the market for another striker – with a big man his priority.

He said: "If we can do that it will be great."

Meanwhile Knight, who was axed because of his bad attitude, has joined Blue Square side Rushden, while Sutton took just 34 minutes to open his Motherwell account scoring against Dundee United on Saturday.
