

Wanderers' season left hanging by a thread after Swindon fight back

WYCOMBE Wanderers head to relegation rivals Leyton Orient on Saturday, knowing that even if they win other results could send them down.

The brave Blues are staring down the barrel of an instant return to League

Two after promotion-chasing Swindon twice hit back to claim a 2-2 draw and deny Gary Waddock's team a fourth win on the bounce on Saturday.

The Blues, who have two games left to produce the greatest Houdini act in their history, now need favours as well.

Even if they beat Orient on Saturday they will be relegated if Exeter and Gillingham win their games against Southampton and Hartlepool respectively – and even a point each would relegate Blues unless they are able to claw back their goal difference over the final two matches.

After Orient, Gary Waddock's Wanderers finish at home to Gillingham on the last day.
